Job description & Desired Knowledge:

My laboratory employs a multidisciplinary approach to address questions in the area of microbial interface biology and associated host immune response to the human pathogen Streptococcus pneumoniae. We are interested in host-pathogen interaction, infection and immunity, and vaccine development. We are particularly interested in the molecular biology of B cells and developing a molecular understanding of how glycoconjugate vaccines work. We combine immunological, molecular and proteomics approaches within vitro and animal models for these studies.

The ideal candidate should have a strong background and bench-level experience in molecular immunology and human infectious diseases, and demonstrated expertise in working with animal models of human infectious diseases. Prior experience of working in a biosafety level 3 laboratory is necessary.
